JOHN MASON

Leap Year Party
Shubert Theatre, February 29, 1912

Evening Performance, 8 o'clock

ILLUSTRIOUS NOBLES:

The date, falling as it does on the last day of February, 1912, quite appropriately suggests the idea of making this

A Leap Year Theatre Party

But this announcement is of small moment when it is taken into consideration what attraction we have been fortunate enough to secure for this always enjoyable event. It is none other than in the latest and greatest success from the pen of the leading American dramatist, and a Brother Shriner, too, Augustus Thomas.

The play is "AS A MAN THINKS," which will be seen here with the original company from the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, New York.

Every Shriner and his friends who attended the annual theatre party four seasons ago at the Majestic Theatre and witnessed the admirable performance of John Mason in Augustus Thomas' "The Witching Hour" will look forward with the pleasantest anticipations to this performance of the new play which Noble Thomas has written for Mr. Mason.

Mr. Mason's rôle is that of Dr. Seelig, a Jewish physician, a man of deep learning, who teaches the futility of hatred, the world-wide importance of man's belief in woman and the necessity of recognizing a double standard of morals.

"One leaves it," said the New York Times, "with the experience of having sat at a rich man's feast. In other words, it is a drama from soup to nuts. It is properly savored and spiced."

The play jumped into immediate favor in New York. The individual acting, the story with its underlying philosophy, the dramatic intensity of the situations and the magnificent settings, all combine toward making "AS A MAN THINKS" the most satisfying drama of the period.
